Honoring the PAST, living the PRESENT, poised for the FUTURE
The University of Louisiana at Monroe continues to be regarded as an icon of academic excellence at home and abroad because it remains rooted in tradition, while recognizing that sustaining those traditions requires a willingness to keep pace with the diverse needs of our ever-changing world. We continue to attract new Warhawks to join our ongoing mission, sending graduates around the globe equipped with a first-class education acquired in state-of-the-art facilities.

This edition of the ULM Magazine will introduce you to new acquaintances and reunite you with old friends. We welcome the arrival of new ULM family members — including Executive Director of Foundation and Alumni Relations Susan Chappell, Alumni Affairs Director Robin Underwood, and Associate Director of Alumni Affairs Brooke O’Bryant — and share in the good news of Warhawks who have advanced beyond our borders in pursuit of their dreams.

Although we celebrate the successes of our Warhawks whether near or far, we are especially pleased when their career paths lead them back to the nest. Stan Humphries and E.J. Ok are two former ULM athletes, who have progressed from talented players to outstanding coaches, helping to groom the next generation of sports stars in their capacities as assistant and associate coaches for the ULM Women’s Basketball team. While some of our Warhawks return to extend to others the guidance they once received here, others pledge their allegiance to ULM by sending more loved ones our way, as the Scelfo family has done now for over forty years. Still others express their continued support for ULM with generous donations and a regular presence at campus and community events, like Buddy Embanato, the university’s first mascot and a longtime member of the ULM Letterman’s Club (L Club).

We are delighted to know that so many members of our extensive ULM family stand with us as we journey towards the realization of campus constructions and renovations projected in our 2013 Facility Master Plan. On July 1, 2014 local community leaders joined us in a groundbreaking ceremony for the cutting-edge renovations in store for 51-year-old Sandel Hall. In August 2014, we gathered once again for the Liew International Student Center groundbreaking. The facility will serve as ULM’s center for facilitating the cultural transition of our many international students, doing our best to ensure that they begin their new lives as Warhawks without the usual hassles of relocation.

As we enter the 2014 school year, we gladly accept our role in shaping the lives of new students and in maintaining the ties that bind us together with our alumni, friends, and community supporters who make our continued existence richer with each passing year.

I trust that the stories in this issue of the ULM Magazine will remind you of the joys of your own university experience, and encourage you to join me in ULM’s drive to propel the education of our region toward a promising future.

ULM ALUMNI 2014 AWARD WINNERS

Outstanding ULM Alumni honored

The Golden Arrow Award recipient is Bart Dornier (BBA ’85). He is a State Farm agent in Metairie, and is an Alumni Legacy member. He served as Alumni Association President in 2006-07, and his dedication and love of ULM is evident to all. He is a supporter of the ULM Golf program and an active Athletic Foundation member.

Gary Hamilton is the recipient of the George T. Walker Lifetime Achievement Award. He is retired from Bancorp South and is active in many civic organizations. Throughout his years of service, he has supported the Athletic Foundation and has been a dedicated Grove tailgating resident. Through his generosity with time and service to the Alumni Association, he has been a key supporter of the shrimp boil and La’ Louisianne Crawfish Boil for many years.

Michael Davis (B.S. ’08) is the recipient of the Rising Young Alumni Award. He is the Assistant Director of Housing at ULM. He has served on the ULM Staff Senate since 2012, and is currently serving as Staff Senate President for 2014-15. Michael is working on his master’s degree in student affairs administration. He is both an Alumni and Athletic Foundation member, and has been active in both organizations since graduation. Michael frequently volunteers and assists with events and activities at the Anna Gray Noe Alumni Center, and also serves as a deacon at North Monroe Baptist Church. He is married to Kristi and has one son, Cole, and is expecting his second child in October.

The Lincoln/Union Alumni Chapter is the recipient of the Chapter of the Year Award. The chapter held its 29th Annual Golf Tournament and Silent Auction. This fundraiser is held each year to sponsor a ULM student scholarship.

NEW INTERNATIONAL STUDENT CENTER

ULM welcomes the world

In January, Eric Liew (BBA ’93) and his wife Linda Pruett pledged $1 million to the building of a new International Student Center on the ULM campus. The center will serve as a base camp for arriving international students, many of whom arrive with no friends or connections in the area.

The center will house students until they are placed into campus housing or find an apartment. It will also be a place for students to socialize.

The Liew family broke ground on the project in August. The new facility will be next to Col. T. William Hemphill Hall on Northeast Drive. Construction is set to be completed in spring 2015.
GET TO KNOW THESE NEW ULM FACES

ULM Foundation and Alumni Relations

Meet Susan: As a wife and mother of three, ULM has been a part of my life for as long as I can remember. My father, Van McGraw, began employment at what was then Northeast Louisiana State College in 1959, and served for the next 37 years. My husband Ryan and I are both proud ULM graduates who have worked hard to make our community a better place. As the new executive director of Foundation and Alumni Relations, I hope to use my years of management experience to further the university’s success and ensure a stable financial future for its students and constituents.

Meet Robin: I have a lifelong passion for ULM. Growing up I never had any doubt that I would attend ULM, and I enrolled with joy in the fall 1997. I am a 2000 graduate with a major in marketing, and I am the current Director of Alumni Affairs. My father, Coach Roger Stockton, is a Hall of Fame member, and my mother, Dr. Cathy Stockton, earned the first doctorate of education issued in our university’s history. My husband Geoffrey Underwood and his parents Geoff and Donna Underwood have degrees from ULM. We are proud parents of three future Warhawks: Grace, 14, Emma, 12, and Roger, 7, who bleed maroon and gold.

Meet Brooke: Growing up in South Louisiana, ULM was not always on my radar, but after one fateful trip to Monroe for Browse on the Bayou, that changed — it was love at first sight. I graduated from ULM in 2011 with a degree in mass communications-broadcast journalism with a minor in sociology. While here, I was a Hometown Hawk and the editor-in-chief of the Hawkeye. After graduation, I became a ULM recruiter and now reside as the associate director for Alumni Affairs. My husband Cory and I live here in Monroe, with our energetic dog, Stella.

“MOST UNDERRATED" LOUISIANA COLLEGE

Ranked by BusinessInsider.com

ULM has been ranked by BusinessInsider.com as Louisiana’s “most underrated” college.

BusinessInsider.com, in partnership with niche.com, published a list of 50 underrated colleges around the country — one from each state — which exhibited great academics, high acceptance rates and strong in-state student populations.

“I have said many times, ULM is the best kept secret in Louisiana’s higher education system,” said ULM President Dr. Nick J. Bruno. “It is very rewarding to see independent sources recognize that ULM is an institution that has a lot to offer to students seeking a quality education.”

ULM was ranked with other “underrated” universities, such as Clemson University, Mississippi State University, Texas A&M University, the University of Florida, the University of Oklahoma and Virginia Tech University.
Sandel Hall has been a pillar of the university’s landscape since 1963, and after over a decade of waiting, the university has embarked on the complete remodel of the 51-year-old structure. ULM officially began construction on the building in July.

Sandel Hall began as the university’s second library location after outgrowing its first location in Bry Hall. The then two-story building served as the university library until the current library location opened in 1999.

In 1977 a third floor was added to the location, and since the library’s departure from the building, the facility has housed many university departments.

Recruitment and Admissions, The Office of the Registrar, Financial Aid, Enrollment Services, The Office of Career Connections, and the Bookstore will all call the new Sandel Hall home. KEDM Public Radio 90.3 and the student-run radio station KXUL will both have studio and office space in Sandel Hall. Officials hope to have the building ready for use in spring 2016.
In August, ULM faculty gathered to honor excellence in Research, Teaching, Creative/Artistic Activity, and Service at the fourth annual ULM Foundation Awards for Excellence. Each winner was chosen based on a set of standards determined by a selection committee. For each category, recipients were awarded unique honors based on their overall effectiveness in their field and their contributions to the university.

- The award for Excellence in Research went to Dr. Khalid El Sayed, professor of medicinal and natural products chemistry in the School of Pharmacy. In his 13 years at ULM he has acquired research grants totaling over $1.6 million, and has participated in joint collaborations and studies that have resulted in more than 100 publications, seven patents, five book chapters, and 150 research abstracts.

- Dr. Deborah Chandler, associate professor and director of choral activities, won the award for Excellence in Creative/Artistic Activity. Noted as the backbone of the vocal music program at ULM, Chandler is in constant demand as a guest conductor and clinician, and is known for her ability to attract the most talented students to the ULM Choral Program.

- The award for Excellence in Service was given to Dr. Kim Marie Tolson, professor of biology, and coordinator of graduate services for the College of Arts, Education, and Sciences. Tolson is known as a community educator who is heavily involved in professional and civic organizations which enlighten and enhance the region’s foothold in the biology community.

- The Excellence in Teaching award winner, Dr. Joshua Stockley, associate professor of political science and director of the ULM Honors Program, has been called a marvel in the classroom who utilizes teaching techniques that require critical thinking and push for student engagement. Stockley is willing to take chances and incorporate new media into lectures to improve the experience of his students, as technology continually becomes a major player in how society operates.
Softball finished the season as the nation’s top team in stolen bases, after an unprecedented and unexpected run in the Sun Belt Conference tournament. ULM finished among the final three in the tournament after ousting seventh-seeded Troy, fourth-seeded Western Kentucky, and third-seeded Georgia State. ULM, which was picked last in the 2014 preseason poll, won three games at the conference tournament for the first time since 2008.

After a mid-season coaching change, ULM Baseball turned their season around and nabbed the eighth seed in the Sun Belt Conference Tournament. The Warhawks staved off Western Kentucky in a conference tournament elimination game before falling to Texas State. The second-half season surge and tournament run helped propel catcher/infielder Ross Moore to a spot on the Sun Belt Conference All-Tournament team.
The ULM Water Ski Team won its 25th National Championship title at the Collegiate Water Ski National Championship Oct. 20, 2013, at Imperial Lakes in El Centro, Calif. The team has won three years in a row and 25 titles in the 35 years of the competition’s existence.

The Warhawks racked up 12,885 points, ahead of the second place team, in-state rival, the University of Louisiana at Lafayette, who scored 12,610 points, and the University of Alabama who came in third with 10,330 points.

The ULM men swept the top five spots in the jump competition with Claudio Koestenberger coming in first, Siarhei Bushyn coming in second, Martin Kolman placing third, Michael Stevenson placing fourth, and Will Oliver placing fifth. The five men were separated by only 40 points with the first place Koestenberger scoring 580 points and the fifth place Oliver Scoring 540 points. James Earl won the men’s trick competition. The ULM men also took the overall men’s, slalom, trick, and jump competitions. Martin Kolman and Siarhei Bushyn took first and second place respectively in the overall men’s skier competition.

On the women’s side, Janice Stevens took second place in the women’s trick competition and fifth place in the women’s overall competition. Emilia Hoikkanen won second place in the overall women’s skier competition.

Women’s Team: Jenny Benjamin of London, England; Eleanor Benjamin of London, England; Emilia Hoikkanen of Finland; Carli Guyer of Pierson, Fla.; Maddison McCammon of Clermont, Fla.; and Janice Stevens of Morrisburg, Ontario, Canada.

Men’s Team: Jake Bridges of Ireland; Siarhei Bushyn of Minsk, Belarus; James Earl of Solihull, England; Claudio Koestenberger of Sattendorf, Austria; Martin Kolman of Prague, Czech Republic; Will Oliver of Hull, England; Nikita Papkul of Novopolotsk, Belarus; Tyler Scott of Covington; and Michael Stevenson of Gilbert, Ariz.

BRETT PREUETT WINS SHOWDOWN

Heads to Bassmaster Classic

Brett Preuett, a graduate student from Colfax, won the Carhartt College Classic on Aug. 5, at the Chatuge Reservoir in Young Harris, Ga. Preuett will now compete in the coveted 2015 Bassmaster Classic.

Preuett was part of an eight-man bracket made up of the top individual anglers from the overall team tournament — the Carhartt College Series National Championship.

Along with the individual honor, Preuett and his partner, Jackson Blackett of Sterlington, placed third in the team competition.

ULM sent three other duos to compete in the team tournament. Trapper Munn of Oak Grove partnered with Dustin Perkins of Elmer.

Nick LaDart of Monroe partnered with Brian Eaton of Monroe, and the freshman duo of Tyler Craig of Frierson and Joseph Grassi of Monroe, rounded out the group which competed in Georgia.

WELCOME TO NEW WARHAWK COACHES

ULM athletics infused with new leadership

Since the arrival of Brian Wickstrom as ULM’s new Athletic Director in 2013, he has made strides to up the potential of the 15 NCAA programs on campus. With retirements and some reassessment, new coaches have been hired for Women’s Basketball, Women’s Golf, Softball, and Baseball.

After the retirement of long-time coach Mona Martin, Women’s Basketball brought in Jeff Dow to lead the team. Dow brings a winning tradition to ULM with an overall coaching record of 221-109. Dow subsequently hired two assistant coaches — ULM and NFL legend Stan Humphries, and former Rice University star player, Amber Cunningham.

Women’s Golf saw a change in coach as well, with the arrival of Heather Holte, who brings over 15 years of golf and softball coaching experience to ULM.

Corey Lyon is the new head coach for Warhawk Softball. Lyon comes to ULM after a three-year stint at Southern Arkansas University, which saw a yearly increase in wins under his leadership, culminating with a trip to the NCAA tournament. Lyon is building his staff and has brought in former Lamar University batting leader, Candyce Carter as assistant coach.

Bruce Peddie was named the Warhawk Baseball head coach on May 13, after taking on interim duties earlier in the year. Soon after, Peddie brought in Eric Folmar, who will work with the Warhawk hitters, and serve as the team’s recruiting coordinator.

Honoring the PAST, living the PRESENT, poised for the FUTURE
Athletic Director (AD) Brian Wickstrom and ULM Women’s Basketball Head Coach Jeff Dow produced a lot of buzz within the ULM community in April when they announced the hiring of Stan Humphries as a new assistant coach for the ULM women’s basketball team. Yes, the Stan Humphries.

With Humphries’s football achievements still remaining in the ULM record books, it might be expected he would return — again — as a football coach or consultant. However, Humphries has returned ready to add his level of excellence to the ULM women’s basketball program.
Humphries is cemented in ULM lore as one the school’s greatest quarterbacks (QB). His football number and name tower over fans in Malone Stadium and several of his achievements are still in the ULM record books, but he returns home to showcase his true passion — basketball.

Humphries brings 13 years of coaching girls’ basketball and a sincere excitement for the sport where has already established a winning reputation, and he is ready to add to that level of excellence at ULM. Even still, he knows that not everyone will initially understand his new role.

“If people don’t know what I’ve been doing for the last 13 years, they might ask, ‘What in the world?’” Humphries says, “Because you have this football guy coaching women’s basketball.”

However, the more one learns about Stan, the more obvious it is that basketball is no passing craze for him. It is much deeper.
What pushed Stan Humphries, football champion, onto the basketball court? It all comes down to one word — family.

“Probably from growing up, I loved basketball more than I probably ever loved football. My mom’s side of the family, that’s all they ever played, was basketball. I just love basketball,” said Humphries.

After a strong high school career in both football and basketball, Stan was left with a tough decision — which sport to play in college. Humphries thought of his future.

“I really at one point thought about going to college and playing basketball — at lower level, small schools — but I felt like I had a better chance at football to do more and go further,” Humphries said.

And go further he did. A lot further.

Humphries excelled at football and impressed the athletics administration at Northeast Louisiana University so much that they offered him a scholarship.

At NLU, Stan quarterbacked the 1987 I-AA National Championship team, and, in only two years, threw for 4,395 yards and 29 touchdowns, and was selected as a first-team All-American, as well as the Southland Conference and Louisiana Offensive Player of the Year.

Following the 1987 championship season, Humphries turned his attention to the National Football League (NFL). Drafted by the Washington Redskins in the sixth round of the 1988 NFL Draft, Humphries grew as a QB.

“I learned a lot with Washington, playing for Joe Gibbs. I learned a lot from my teammates in Washington, who were the older, veteran guys.”

Altogether, Humphries appeared in nine games during his four seasons in Washington, before he was traded to the San Diego Chargers prior to the 1992 season.

In San Diego, Humphries earned a starting position. In his six years with the Chargers, Humphries threw for more than 16,000 yards and 85 TDs.

Most notable was the 1994 season, when he uncorked some of his college-days magic, and lead the Chargers to comeback wins, including a go-ahead touchdown pass to beat the Pittsburgh Steelers 17-13 to put the Chargers in Super Bowl XXIX.

Even though the Super Bowl trip did not end the way Humphries intended — the Chargers lost to the San Francisco 49ers 49-26 — Stan continued his hard play for the remainder of his career, until a series of concussions forced him to retire from the NFL following the 1997 season.
Following two years coaching football at ULM, Humphries realized his dreams of coaching basketball. He earned a stint at Ouachita Christian School (OCS) as an assistant coach with the girl’s basketball team, where he coached his daughters Brooke and Chelsea, before embarking on a successful run as head coach of girl’s basketball and athletic director at St. Mary’s High School in Natchitoches, with Chelsea as his point guard.

Brooke and Chelsea remember their father’s strength on the sidelines. Brooke says, “He expected us to be the best we could. He was intense in a good way.”

Chelsea holds onto the moments with him: “Everybody would tell us we had a famous dad, but where he was famous to us was as our coach. That’s where we got to see him as a leader.” Just like their father, the small moments carry the greatest weight for the Humphries sisters.

“We made it to the state semifinals, and even though we lost there, that accomplishment — to watch my daughters — was probably better than even me playing in the Super Bowl. As a parent, as a dad, I had a lot of fun.” Even years later, one can still see the impact their experiences together had on Stan.
Stan never forgot to take the time to enjoy the experiences with his daughters. He has strong emotions well up about the opportunity.

“Brooke’s senior year at OCS, Chelsea was a freshman, and they started on the same team. We made it to the state semifinals, and even though we lost there, that accomplishment — to watch my daughters — was probably better than even me playing in the Super Bowl. As a parent, as a dad, I had a lot of fun.”

After returning to the twin cities, Humphries now turns his attention to bringing the same level of success to ULM.

Humphries notes, “This university has been really, really good to me. I want to do anything I can to help.”

Wickstrom is just as excited to get to work with Humphries, and reiterates Stan’s openness to the ULM community.

“Stan is just a standup guy. He has no hidden agendas. He is who he is,” said Wickstrom.

Coach Dow appreciates the love that Humphries has for his alma mater.

Dow says, “Obviously, with Stan, you’re talking about somebody who is passionate about ULM, ULM Athletics, and women’s basketball. So he’s basically doing anything he can to help.”

Humphries and the rest of the women’s basketball staff will have a great opportunity to prove their toughness this season. The team lost four seniors — the top four leading scorers — to graduation. Moreover, the Sun Belt Conference has continued expansion, changing the basketball landscape with several new teams.

Even though the team may be going through a transition, Humphries’s expectations for the team are still very high.

Humphries says, “That’s when you have the greatest accomplishments, when folks aren’t as sure about your future.”

Humphries will bring the competitive hunger his family knows and loves to the ULM team.
Coach Humphries and the rest of the Warhawks know that dictating their future will begin with hard work. He wants players to take a selfless approach to their game, with a sense of family, a concept for which he cares so much.

"I try to impress selflessness upon teams I’ve coached. They want each other to have success. It’s not so much about ‘I.’ You might not be the most talented, but if you have that belief and trust in yourself and your teammates, you can achieve a lot more than you think you can."

With a ULM legend back patrolling the sidelines, he and the rest of his ULM family see no limit to what the Warhawks can achieve.

The Warhawks women’s basketball team begins its season on November 15 at home against William Carey.

YEAR IN PICTURES
Just about anyone who has ever been on the ULM campus in the last 30 years knows about the amazing E.J. Ok.

As a graduate and now employee, I felt that I knew most of what there was to know about my alma mater’s history, but I found that I knew little about the real E.J. — the woman behind the basketball star. The stats, the awards, and the accolades were all easy to find, but who is E.J. Ok? What are her goals, her memories, and her passions?

I sat down with E.J. after I watched the KNOE special, “They Played for Pride.” Former assistant women’s basket coach, Janie Fincher Roland, uploaded the video — on its last leg — to YouTube. It captured my attention. It was at that moment I wanted to learn more about her life, and I received much more than I ever expected. The petite and bubbly, yet confident, coach led one of the most successful runs in women’s basketball history, and she was sitting in my office.

I believe most people in life want to make an impact on others. Even if that impact is small, it is an impact. My initial thought on E.J. was that she was a mega-star, with hoards of fans begging for her autograph and singing her praises.

While that was ultimately true, what I did not realize was the impact that admiration had on E.J. Fandom is not a one-way street, and that was definitely the case for E.J.
When talking about those days of NLU women’s basketball glory, her face lit up and her energy was apparent. She reveled in those memories.

“[The fans],” she said, “They impacted my life. I played with a lot of passion because of them and I stayed here because of them. They made me feel very important. People make a big difference and I will never forget those people who have touched my life.”

She has not forgotten a single moment of her time as an NLU star point guard.

She shifted in her chair, perked up and laughed when I asked her about her favorite memories as a student-athlete. “Great games against Louisiana Tech. Oh! The people, they were crazy; a good crazy. They were wonderful. It’s competition I will never forget. I had so much fun every time we played Louisiana Tech because I wanted to make our fans happy. It was an unbelievable rivalry. I remember all of the games. Not just one or two games — all of them,” she said.

The admiration of E.J.’s fans impacted her life, and this admiration was not a one-way street.... “I played with a lot of passion because of them, and I stayed here because of them.... I will never forget those people who touched my life.”
E.J. takes much of what she learned from her legendary coach, Linda Harper — who passed away in February 2014 — as a barometer for her own success.

“She was like my mom, and because of her, I am here today. She was an incredible person, but she was tough. She let me know exactly what I needed to do and she knew how to manage her staff and her players by pushing the right buttons,” she said. “I’m going to be like her. She cared about her players, and she loved me and took care of me because I had no family here. She helped me get through.”

“I miss her a lot. I could trust her and always count on her. If you have that, someone like her, then you are the luckiest person in the world.”

Now entering her 24th year on the bench as part of the coaching team for ULM women’s basketball, Ok takes that same approach in her own coaching. She’s confident about the upcoming season and the new additions on the coaching staff, including new head coach, Jeff Dow.

“I feel very good about [the team], and Jeff is very hardworking and demanding. We are going in the right direction — not just players but the program as a whole. The program has been rich in high potential since I was playing, and everyone is really excited about bringing in a new style and new people. Our players have the right attitude and that makes a big difference.”

“I have already experienced this life, which is a big plus when trying to teach them. I’m trying to find a way to push them in the right direction and to help them improve as players. I want to help them have the drive that I had. My goal is for them to reach their goals,” she said.

At the conclusion of my visit with E.J., she told me how she would like to thank her fans. She said, “One day, when I become a millionaire, I want to invite all of them to a big party because they mean so much to me.”

ABOUT E.J. OK

Ok was not only one of the greatest players in ULM history, but she also played on what are arguably the greatest Warhawk teams, the 1982-86 units that went 102-15, won three Southland Conference championships and played in the 1985 Final Four round of the NCAA Women’s Basketball tournament.

One of the most dazzling point guards to play the game, Ok averaged 18.9 points, 2.7 rebounds and 8.4 assists per game for her career. In 1984-85, she averaged 18 points and 8.9 assists to lead ULM to a 30-2 record — which was top in the nation — and to the Final Four.

In 1986 she earned the Jim Corbett Award as the state’s Athlete of the Year, collegiate, professional, male or female. A three-year All-American, Ok is ULM’s all-time leader in assists with 978, and free throws made with 528. In 2004-05 she was bumped to second on the all-time steals list by former Warhawk Nina Randle. She had 297 steals over her career and ranks second in points scored with 2,208.

During her four years as the Warhawks’ point guard, she and All-American Lisa Ingram led ULM to three top 20 rankings — No. 13 in 1984, No. 2 in 1985, and No. 3 in 1986.

A member of the ULM Hall of Fame, Ok was named Southland Conference Player of the Year four straight years — the only basketball player, female or male, to ever be so honored.

In addition to the honors mentioned, Ok was also named to the Louisiana Sports Hall of Fame and in 2004 became the first female inductee into the Southland Conference Hall of Honor.
Ok was not only one of the greatest players in ULM history, she also played on what are arguably the greatest Warhawk teams, the 1982-86 units that went 102-15, won three Southland Conference championships and played in the 1985 Final Four.
Seven siblings, three in-laws, and two offspring make the Scelfos a Warhawk family a dozen times over.

Some family traditions are consciously passed down and others just seem to come naturally. For the Scelfo family, attending ULM was just a natural part of their transition to the world beyond the family home in New Iberia.
It all began in the early 1970’s when Robert “Bobby” Scelfo (BS ’75) accepted a scholarship to play football for the newly renamed Northeast Louisiana University (NLU). Jenny Scelfo Landry (BS ’75) decided to follow in her big brother’s footsteps, and soon she also enrolled.

Bobby and Jenny’s triumphant transitions to collegiate life gave birth to a succession of Scelfo siblings attending NLU for more than a decade: Frank Scelfo (BS ’81, MEd ’83), Barbara Ann Scelfo Jeffers (attended ’79-’80), Chris Scelfo (BGS ’86, MEd ’88), Susan Scelfo Clinkscales (BS ’89) and James “Jimmy” Scelfo (BS ’91).

Like Jenny, Susan was inspired most by big brother Bobby, whose ULM pharmacy degree paved the way for his ascent to director of pharmacy at River Oaks Hospital. Susan highlights Bobby’s persuasiveness on choosing Louisiana’s only publicly supported pharmacy education and research institution.

“He explained how a career as a pharmacist was rewarding, serves people, and is a great profession for a woman.” As influential as this sale’s pitch was, Susan revealed the following as his most convincing evidence, “He married Michelle – a fellow pharmacist – which reaffirmed and strengthened my decision to apply for pharmacy school and attend ULM.”

Susan stated that she continues to enjoy the benefits of her ULM educational foundation in her current role as senior director of client services for California-based OptumRx. Looking back on her journey from retail pharmacy to managed care pharmacy, she proclaimed, “Bobby was right – pharmacy has been rewarding, fulfilling, and an incredible career with endless opportunities!”

Susan expressed gratitude to Bobby for both her career and school choices. When asked how being a ULM student has benefitted her in her career, she responded, “ULM provided a strong foundation for my success, a great education and wonderful experiences.”

The Scelfos expanded more than their career opportunities while attending at ULM. The Scelfo family history and the University of Louisiana at Monroe’s history became so intertwined that several of the siblings expanded the family by marrying ULM graduates. Jenny’s late husband was Wiley S. Reagan Jr. (BS ’75, MS ’77); Frank married Holly Kingrey Scelfo (BS ’82); and Chris married Nancy Caldwell Scelfo (BBA ’83). What’s more, Bobby and his wife, Michaele Wolfe Scelfo (BS ’82) have produced two ULM warhawks of their own: Craig Scelfo (BBA ’11) and Meredith Scelfo (construction management major).

“The inspiration for me to pursue a degree at ULM was from both of my parents,” Craig said. “I grew up listening to stories from my entire family discussing the great times they each had at ULM. The first day I stepped on campus to visit, I realized what they had all been talking about for so many years and that ULM was the place for me.”

Michaele said that she and Bobby made no effort to influence their children’s school choices, but she still believes that knowing how much NLU meant to their parents played a major role in Craig and Meredith’s decision to continue the family tradition. “I began serving on the Alumni BOD (board of directors) when I was expecting Craig! To this day Bobby and I have friends from NLU that are part of our daily lives, and Craig and Meredith have grown up around these friends, and of course essentially all of the immediate Scelfo family.” In addition, Michaele points out that the family’s participation in alumni events has afforded their children an opportunity to experience the camaraderie of the ULM alumni community for themselves.

Like his aunt, Craig also credits his ULM education for the success of his career. He began working at First Guaranty Bank in Hammond in 2011, the same year he graduated from ULM.
“I am very thankful to my entire family for encouraging me to attend ULM, a school and time in my life that I will always cherish.”

Craig is certainly not the only Scelfo with cherished memories of life at ULM. Bobby recalls canoe rides on the bayou, and Jenny thinks back to times spent lounging around the student union building with friends. Both Chris and Frank also enjoyed the bayou in the springtime.

Nearly all of them fondly remember kicking off fun nights at the Siesta, and gathering at the Circus — the discotheque where students could dance the night away. “Back then the sidewalks rolled up at Midnight,” Michaele said. “On Saturday nights after midnight the hangout was The Hangout!” The Hangout offered Monroe’s first bring-your-own-beer after-hours bar from midnight to 4 a.m.

By the time Craig arrived at ULM, the places to be and the times to be there had changed. The Siesta and the Circus had been replaced by Mustang Sally’s as a favorite student hangout; this club offered food, drinks and entertainment Thursday through Saturday night.

Despite the changes in hangouts, nightlife and even the face of the campus, Michaele feels certain that both Craig’s and Meredith’s ULM experiences have been comparable to hers and Bobby’s in all of the right ways: “still a great place to be... nice people, ‘just right’ campus size/student population, great education and reputation in academic fields.” Michaele added that she could only think of one disadvantage of her children attending ULM, and that is the 280 mile distance from home. “The kids might consider that an advantage!” she acknowledged with a laugh.

The ULM campus has been an ever-present component of Scelfo family life, even for those who graduated decades ago. Frank and Holly treasured their times here so much that they became the first couple to hold a wedding reception at the ULM Alumni Center. Moreover, Frank remarked that many of the people that they met in college have become lifelong friends.

Not only have the bonds of friendship endured the test of time, but the wisdom imparted by ULM professors has also transcended the boundaries of the classroom. Craig, who has a BBA in finance, has said of his favorite professor, Dr. Michael Parker, “He taught his students about life, and not just about numbers. His lessons were based more on his life experiences and ways to progress in a career rather than progressing through school. He was a great professor and family man.”

Craig’s mother, Michaele, noted that “preceptors and mentors/guest speakers are now colleagues with whom we have networked at conventions and served with in the state association.” Dr. Sujit Das & Mr. Geiger helped to shape Susan’s thought process in college. “They were both, inspirational, encouraging, and talented,” she said. Frank revered Coach St. Amant and Coach John David Crowe. Jenny attributes her solid foundation and her status in the medical technology society of Louisiana to her experiences at ULM. Her favorite professor was Dr. Keye.

Jenny’s B.S. in medical technology laid the first stone for her career as a clinical diagnostics manager for Horiba, Inc. in New Iberia.

Her familial sources of inspiration, Bobby and Michaele, live in Covington and have parlayed their bachelor’s degrees in pharmacy into successful careers as a hospital pharmacy director and a long term care consultant, respectively.

Frank’s B.S. in physical education helped him to secure a spot as the quarterback coach for the National Football League’s Jacksonville Jaguars in Jacksonville, Fla.

A bachelor’s in liberal arts and a master’s in education endowed Chris with the knowledge and versatility to become the tight ends coach for the Atlanta Falcons of the National Football League.

Susan’s B.S. in pharmacy led to a senior position with the premier integrated health services provider in the world.

After earning his B.S. degree, Jimmy moved on to medical school and is now a practicing physician in Orlando, Fla. Bobby and Michaele’s son, Craig, has applied lessons learned in pursuit of his BBA in finance to become a commercial loan officer with the same Hammond bank that first hired him shortly after the conferment of his ULM degree.

Craig’s sister, Meredith, is currently at ULM majoring in construction management. As for Bobby and Michaele’s seventh grader, Brent, we will just have to wait and see if the Scelfo-ULM legacy continues.

In the 1970’s, one by one, the Scelfo siblings of New Iberia embarked on a journey to Northeast Louisiana University, where they sowed the seeds for loving marriages, future generations, lasting friendships, prolific careers and a family tradition that lives on at the University of Louisiana at Monroe in 2014.
After establishing the SOAR campaign in 2013, the University of Louisiana at Monroe has seen a surge in support from the community in an effort to propel the university forward during continued budget challenges facing Louisiana higher education. ULM’s constituents, with help from the ULM foundation, have shifted the university’s future by helping to advance its mission of giving students a safe, comfortable institution, which provides innovative technology and facilities.

The SOAR initiatives provide opportunities for alumni and friends of the university to participate in every aspect of its future — from endowments supporting students and faculty to building projects adorning all areas of campus. During this leadership phase of the campaign, many have already stepped up to support several of the exciting SOAR projects, including:

- The Success of our first two President’s Top Hawks Scholarship recipients — high ability incoming freshmen — who recently returned to the U.S. after studying abroad, expanding their educational reach, and spreading the word about ULM around the world.

- The Opportunities for faculty, such as the Thurman Potts Endowed Professorship, which provides funds for construction management faculty for research, classroom supplies, student trips, and more.

- Achieving a competitive edge through the enhanced support of our athletic programs and facilities such as the new field turf donated by JPS Aviation.

- Renovation of facilities brings top students and student-athletes to the university. Plans are to rebuild Brown Theater to a state-of-the-art performing arts center. Additionally, the Malone Fieldhouse project with its new locker room, coaches’ offices, and hall of fame area will attract more top-tier athletes into the ULM family.
SUCCESS of its students is a major focus of ULM's culture of excellence.

OPPORTUNITIES for innovative academics define ULM's commitment to excellence.

CHIEVING a competitive edge for ULM Athletic programs is a challenge that must be met.

ENOVATION of existing facilities and building of new facilities ensures a quality living-learning environment at ULM.

Matching Gifts: Many companies participate in matching gift programs. Some companies will even match gifts made by retirees and spouses of employees. If your company is eligible, request a matching gift form from your employer and send it completed and signed with your gift. We will do the rest. The impact of your gift may be doubled or even tripled!

Tribute / Memorial Gift: Tribute or memorial gift is a wonderful way to honor someone you admire, respect, or want to remember in a meaningful way, including but not limited to a professor, an advisor, a mentor, a colleague, a family member, a friend, or an alum. Others have also utilized it as a thoughtful way to celebrate a wedding, graduation, new baby, birthday or any special occasion. For more information, contact the ULM Foundation office at 318.342.3636, or foundation@ulm.edu

Estate & Planned Giving: Many alumni and friends have chosen to support the University through planned gifts such as bequests, trusts, gift annuities and life insurance policies. The George T. Walker Heritage Society honors those donors who name the University as a beneficiary in their wills or who make other deferred or planned estate gifts to ULM. The ULM Foundation can provide you with general information about estate and planned giving options; however, you should consult your attorney and/or financial advisor for more specific advice.

Forty-one years ago, Sunil Kumar graduated from ULM with a master’s degree in business administration.

What followed was a career that would place him as one of the foremost executives in the chemical industry around the world, most recently winning the prestigious Society of Chemical Industry (SCI) Medal for his impact, commitment, and contributions to the chemical industry.

The current chairman and owner of Universal Plastics and Nylon Corporation of America, Kumar was born in New Delhi, India. After moving to the United States in 1971 and deciding to pursue his MBA, Kumar chose ULM.

“My college goal was to get a good job start, and it changed as I went along,” said Kumar. “Exposure to the business world and learning global markets became an obsession as I progressed through my MBA program. Hence, I wrote my MBA research paper on global productivity metrics and did a thesis on location research analysis.”

Kumar went on to executive positions in top companies such as Bridgestone/Firestone, International Specialty Products, and GAF Materials Corporation, all recording multi-billion dollar sales. Kumar credits a portion of his success to the time he spent at ULM and the relationships he built along the way. He has not forgotten those moments on campus so many years ago that helped him become who he is today.

“My ULM education gave me a broad outlook and ability to continue learning after graduation,” he said. “One of my favorite memories is working at the Academic Computer Center with Professor Robert Wysocki. He was bright and intense. In addition to Professor Wysocki, I have high regard for Professor Dwight Vines, who later became president; Professor Robinson in accounting, Professor Hood, and President George Walker.”

Even as a high-level CEO and executive, Kumar has kept up with the university’s success and sees the impact the university has on the community.

“ULM has become a much bigger force in northern Louisiana, especially in education, pharmacy, and business programs,” he said.

With Kumar’s exceptional post-graduate accomplishments, he has given advice to many of those seeking to mirror his success.

“Incoming students should not be ‘scared’ of any academic fields,” he said. “Just follow your passion, even if it seems difficult. Things work out.”
For several consecutive days before each ULM home football game, you can find Buddy Embanato in The Grove.

Buddy enjoys relaxing in his RV, passing out food and drink to friends, watching the team during walkthroughs in nearby Malone stadium, and waiting to cheer the Warhawks to victory.

He says there is nothing he’d rather be doing, and he has been cheering on the ULM Warhawks since they were the Northeast Louisiana State College (NLSC) Indians on the site where Walker Hall is today.

His love and support of the Warhawks began when he was just a kid, maybe 9, he says, and as a Cub Scout carried trays of ice cold colas through the crowd at the football stadium and sold each cup for a nickel. It was just after that time, he estimates in the fall of 1958, that a representative of the university saw him and his friends performing a traditional Native American dance they had learned through their Boy Scout endeavors. That group was recruited to perform the dance at halftime of the home football games, and he would even ride a horse out into the middle of the field just before kickoff and throw a spear into the ground to signify the beginning of the game and declare a hopeful victory.
BUddY EMBANATo

“My sister and I made everyone’s costumes,” he said describing the labor of wrapping each feather together with a thin piece of wire to be incorporated into the outfit. He and his sister, Mariana Burroughs, spent hours getting all the colorful warbonnets just right. And thus the very first mascot was brought to life and Buddy continued his mascot appearances through the beginning of his college days in 1962.

He took the job very seriously

“The mascot’s job is to keep the crowd’s attention” he said. “Along with the cheerleaders,” he added, “If everybody does a little bit, we do a lot.”

With that much love for the school, he was one of the many that hated changing mascots. He had been unfazed by the school’s name changes – his uncle had graduated under the name Northeast Junior College, he and his wife were both graduates under the name NLSC, and his daughters both graduated ULM, but his passion was the mascot, and becoming a Warhawk was a hard transition for him.

“Look, if your kid had a kid and named it something that you hated, you would still love your grandkid,” he said, making a correlation about how he feels about the Warhawk replacing the Indian. “It’s like your child, you love it, you nourish, it and you do everything you can to help it be the best it can be.”

“It’s obvious we had to change,” he said. “And the Warhawk represents fighting — never give up — and with the Chennault tie in, I can’t think of a better mascot.”

He refers to a Louisiana native General Claire L. Chennault, who flew a Warhawk P-40 during World War II and emerged as a leader for American fighter pilots against Japanese opponents in the air.

“This is my school,” Buddy added. “We have to support it in every possible way: athletically, academically — anyway we can support it.”

He is a die-hard fan.

“When I die, I’m gonna have them spread my ashes over the Grove.”
